Peripheral blood lymphocytes (PBL) were isolated from five HLA-A, B, and C antigen-positive (A, B, and C) and five HLA-A, B, and C antigen-negative (A, B, and C) HBsAg-positive, anti-HBsAg-positive, hepatitis B virus (HBV)-DNA-positive patients with chronic active hepatitis. Sera from each patient were tested for HLA-A and HLA-B antigens by a microcytotoxicity test. The possible association between HLA antigens and HBsAg in the PBL was assessed by three different methods, i.e. (a) by assessing the frequency of PBL and sera obtained from the same patients carrying anti-HLA antibodies and/or displaying antigen or antibody-related activities; (b) by assessing the frequency of HBsAg in PBL in which HLA antibodies have been demonstrated; and (c) by assessing the mean percentage of PBL with HBsAg in groups of patients carrying different antigens and/or HLA antibodies. The results obtained by these methods led to the following conclusion: (a) A and B antigens were not associated with HBsAg in PBL. However, the possibility of an association of B antigen with HBsAg cannot be excluded; (b) in PBL carrying HBsAg and HLA-A antibodies, HBsAg was associated with HLA-A28; (c) patients carrying HLA-A28 had a significantly higher mean percentage of PBL carrying HBsAg than patients without HLA-A28.Q: How to get the latest or most recently added row using MySQL?
